SB coverage of lobbying at the House of Commons does not normally include coverage of meetings held inside the House itself. However, in this instance it was the view of the officers covering the lobby that because of the presence of several members of the City of London Anti-Apartheid Group (CLAAG), a 'front' for the violence prone Trotskyist organization known as the Revolutionary Communist Party, it would be expedient to keep discreet observation in the Grand Committee Room during the course of the AAM meeting; It being thought likely that the CLAAG members might take the opportunity to create some form of violent or embarrassing incident in the presence of Members of the House. In the event no disorder or untoward incidents took place.
